THE MARRIAGE CONTRACT THE TREATMENT OF ITS LEGAL AND SOCIAL IMPLICATIONS

Abstract

This paper examines the property regime and the role of the marriage contract as a potential legal instrument in the legislation of the Republic of North Macedonia, focusing on the existing legal gap in this area. The study analyzes the consequences of the absence of provisions allowing spouses to conclude marriage contracts regarding the regulation of property relations, and the resulting impact on the protection of the parties' rights and interests. Furthermore, it provides a comparative analysis of North Macedonian legislation with selected European legal systems, highlighting practices and legal instruments that ensure greater flexibility, clarity, and security for spouses. The research also explores theoretical and practical implications of introducing marriage contracts, considering social, economic, and legal perspectives. In this context, the study identifies alternative approaches and proposes recommendations for legislative reform aimed at aligning domestic law with European standards and trends in the field of property regimes and contractual arrangements between spouses. This analysis contributes to a better understanding of the challenges and opportunities associated with modernizing family law and enhancing legal certainty in marital property relations.
